the initial aim of this thesis was to investigate the language and textual imagery employed on women's coffins dating from the first intermediate period and middle kingdom and to see if this deviates from that found on men's coffins dating from the same time i have argued in my honours dissertation 2010 unpublished that death can be seen as a sexless and genderless state all individuals became an osiris laid low through the inertia imposed upon them the liminal state between life and rebirth was so dangerous because osiris and by association every deceased individual's identity so caught up in sex and gender conventions was taken away from them therefore s/he was rendered powerless and unable to take action to overcome this peril after being found true of voice and justified before the gods the individual could regain their corporeal identity within which so much understanding of self was tied up in regaining their biological sex they were now able to participate in the afterlife and promulgate the eternal cycles of and the work of kathlyn m cooney and heather lee mccarthy focussing primarily on the new kingdom outline the use of artistic decorum mortuary literature and the flaunting of its conventions to suggest that women had to essentially become male or at least lose their specifically feminine identity in order to pass through the liminal state between death and rebirth gender fluidity was required for a woman to follow in the divine precedent of traversing the dangerous liminal stage before rebirth yet remains notably absent from funerary items included in burials for use in the afterlife that is after the deceased was considered justified and had successfully achieved rebirth regaining their earthly sexual identity for example the vast majority of middle kingdom Abydene stelae present women in a stereotypically perfect way seemingly unconcerned with portraying an individual accurately or deviating from the generic standard representation in visual terms likewise grave goods are often highly gendered whether the Egyptians conceived of women as becoming biologically male in order to be reborn or simply used the masculine association with the first individual to be reborn after death the deity Osiris is a topic that will be addressed in this thesis my focus will be on the first intermediate period and middle kingdom coffin texts and i plan to show how this mortuary literature supports the assertion that in the transitional period between physical death and rebirth in the afterlife male and female was a largely irrelevant distinction until the individual had been deemed justified and differences in the material record from this period can tell us more about status hierarchy and regional associations than it can about differential attitudes imposed due to biological sex i shall explore using the Egyptian coffin texts compiled by Adriaan de Buck in general and the textual record surviving from the late dynasty burial of Lady Djehutynakht at Deir el Bersha in particular just how it was possible for a woman to become Osiris by circumventing the cultural dilemma of death as a finality and achieving a successful rebirth c 2150-1630 BC
