in beyond constraint shona n jackson offers a new approach to labour and its analysis by demonstrating the fundamental relation between black and indigenous people s sovereign free and coerced labour in the americas through the writings of cedric robinson walter rodney c l r james and sylvia wynter jackson confronts the elision of indigenous people s labour in the black radical tradition she argues that this elision is an effect of the structural relation of antiblackness to anti indigeneity through which native and black bodies are arranged on either side of a split between unproductive labour and productive work necessary for capital accumulation and for how we read capital in political economic critique this division between labour and work forces the radical tradition to sustain the break between black and indigenous peoples as part of its critical strategies of liberation to address this impasse Jackson reads the tradition against the grain for openings to indigeneity and a method for recovering lost labours this book explores hybrid memoirs combining text and images authored by photographers it contextualizes this sub category of life writing from a historical perspective within the overall context of life writing before taking a structural and cognitive approach to the text image relationship while autobiographers use photographs primarily for their illustrative or referential function photographers have a much more complex interaction with pictures in their autobiographical accounts this book explores how the visual aspect of a memoir may drastically alter the reader's response to the work but also how in other cases the visual parts seem disconnected from the text or underused

this book has two interlocking ambitions the first is to steer what we purposefully call the idioms of critical philosophy towards a more ecologically informed paradigm the second is to recognise that what has rightly come to be called the anthropocene extinction is not and cannot be treated as simply a scientific fact but rather a socio political and ecological dispute of immense complexity we start with an exploration of the consequences of a critical tradition which under the name enlightenment has placed humanity at its centre and chance as its most general and problematic characteristic we argue that this leads to a schizophrenic relationship between radical critique and science which can be avoided if we take the implications of biosemiotics seriously and develop a new ecologically informed social science we argue that in practice this means that for science to be practical in addressing the anthropocene extinction we have to recognise that it operates in a historically emergent highly differentiated technopolitical ecology science as it is currently commonly understood and used is not ecological enough this book will interest social scientists interested in not only describing and critiquing but also understanding and responding to the complex problems facing humanity scientists wanting to make sense of social phenomena those educating the next generation of social scientists and climate activists and policy makers covers numerous topics in management theories and applications such as aggregate planning benchmarking logistics diversification strategy non traditional work arrangements performance measurement productivity measures supply chain management and much more
